XM radio was not forced on the people who have it. They pay for it out of their own pockets because it delivers a product that they want. Finally somebody figured out that we would like to hear real music from real people not what some big corporate flunky or consultant thinks we we want to hear. Let free enterprise do it's own thing. It doesn't take a genius to figure out that the NAB problem with XM has to do with their own pockets not with any concern for the listening public.
